NATIONAL REPUBLICAN. MONETARY MATTERS

WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 28, 1881,

FOR THE REPUBLICAN. ONIONS!

BY A WEST END BELLE.

"You've been eating onions! 'm, whew! smell 'em," *Inn't denyit, my dear," and she turned round her With a twist on her nose and a tear in each eye,

As the odor aforesaid so pungent came by, ways, been eating onions, guess that's so," then he "They're so healthy, my dear-good for cold in the And then for the fiver! why there's nothing so nice When you slice them in vinegar, well cool'd on ice." "But your breath-what a stench! oh, 'ns awful!

*Donon't come near me-ugh!" and then her face "These horrible things, I wish they never could With such masseous odor, annoying me so."

4 P. haw, that's nonsense! Cheese rarebit you're fond which outsmells nice onions, and as heavy as lead; II'm, talk of odors! Whatever's healthy is best-Limburger, for instance, as some will attest." "On you formenting tease! Whew! Go away now,"

But he went to the rows of nice onions in bed, Fall of mischief returned, drew a chair vis-a-cus; Sand by, "Sit here, my darling," "Pooh! Nonsense!

"Come, I'll make you a promise-no nonsense!" said She put her hand to her nose. "What is it?" said "Whene'er I cut onions, if then you'll do the same, We'll discover no odors, and neither can blame." "Onions! Me eat onions? Ugh! you're crazy," she And she poshed back her chair with a toss of the head "Ah! now, darling," said he, "Just this once only try-Just this ence to please me;" and he heaved a deep Looked her full in the face, softly said, "Ah, now do, For I'd do the same, yes, anything to please you." so the frown on her face was replaced by a smile, That crept out 'neath the eyelids, devoid of all guile, She rejented, quick drew up her chair, then he said: "Now, I'll dip one in salt, nice and fresh from the bed; Hold your nose firm and bite, while you think of a Which she did, the spell broke! and she murmur'd " Yum, yum !"

I asked for the secret just related-they said, "Tis above traly given" (with nod of the head). "We've onions now fried, raw, boiled, and smothered with steak,

And advise every one this experiment to make." " For the taste and the smell are forever fast friends, Neither one nor the other can do what offends; So in life, as in nature, we'll strive to agree.

And thus make conclusion saux occumonic. French and American Agriculturists. Our attention is often called to an analogous system of land-holding established in France by the Code Napoleon more than threequarters of a century ago. But engrafted as this system has been on a people unused to it and ignorant of its effect upon the political economy of the state, it has not secured those popular advantages which, in our own country, led the eminent France. In her area of 207,480 square miles, not an the largest State in the Union, her proluction of local and staple crops is enormous. Her wheat crop equals our own. Her cattle and horses almost reach our number, and her sheep outnumbers ours. With a thrifty population, among whom wealth is quite generally diffused, her retources in war and in peace are unbounded, and the mational vitality is the admiration of the civilized world. That much of this agricultural prosperity is due to the fact that the people 2,506; Nashville and Chattanooga, 3,400.
